Around the Hill

As previously noted, Paul Cubeta, for 15 years professor of English and for the past three years Dean of the Faculty, now assumes the newly created post of Academic Vice President, responsible for determining academic priorities at Middlebury.

Paul Cubeta (Williams '47 and Yale (PhD) '54) joined the English department in 1952, became assistant director of the Bread Loaf Writers' Conference in 1955 and director in 1964. He was appointed chairman of the Humanities division in 1963, and named full professor of English in 1964.

Prof. Cubeta's continuing intellectual enthusiasm is Shakespeare. When asked recently how he'd like to spend a leave, he responded instantly, "I'd try to pull together everything I've learned from 17 years of teaching Shakespeare at Middlebury. I feel all of my biases stand in need of a radical and systematic reassessment—I want very much to reexamine my own way of looking at Shakespeare. Your own perspectives change, of course, with life, and your students' attitudes and insights help to shape your own. I feel the need to challenge everything I've ever said or thought about Shakespeare. Not so much the man, himself, or even the roots of his personal intellectual development, as the tremendous depth and subtlety of psychological nuance in his characters, his language, and dramatic situations.

"I long for more time just to think about Shakespeare today, and maybe to try a few ideas out on paper, something worth more of a scrutiny than lecture notes. I worry that I may not be able to get students to care about Shakespeare. Not in a social sense, obviously—Shakespeare will never save Lake Champlain—but in the way that every profound insight into humanity's condition—from the Greeks to the present—is still valuable to all men. As for the present crises of our society, Shakespeare can't solve them either, but if I've gotta go, I'll go with Shakespeare."

Flexing the Curriculum

The curriculum offered by Middlebury during her first 80 years was an approximation of the classic trivium and quadrivium (rhetoric, grammar, logic, arithmetic, geometry, astronomy, and music) whose roots reached back to Plato. Any educated Roman of Cicero's time should have felt quite at home in the classes of Middlebury freshmen, sophomores, or juniors before the Civil War. He might have been surprised by the information in Herschel's Astronomy or Gray's Botany, but the subjects, themselves, were as old as Aristotle.

In 1880, however, the loosening and modernizing trend began at Middlebury that was to see the curriculum evolve faster in the next 90 years than in the previous two millennia. In that year the word "optional" first appeared opposite the catalog listings of Calculus and French for the sophomore year. In 1886-87 a "Latin-Scientific Course" was introduced for those who wished to forego Greek, and the following year the Bachelor of Science degree was introduced for such students. Although they might henceforth read their Greek masters in translation, four years of Latin was still required. (Latin as a requirement for graduation was abandoned only in 1936.) In 1890-91 electives first appeared for upperclassmen in both the BA and BS programs.

Around 1908-09—Pres. Brainerd '64 had retired and John Thomas '90 was now president—the semester system was begun, electives were available now to lowerclassmen also, the catalog listed courses under "Departments" instead of within a complete four-year program, and the classical course of 2000 years' standing was no more. Students might now pursue any of three curricula: the "classical" (roughly the previous "Latin-Scientific"), the scientific, or the pedagogical. In 1913-14, the four-year course system was replaced by the group system which designated departments under one of three groupings—humanities, sciences and languages—and students were required for the first time to elect courses to form major and minor fields of study. In 1936 the BS degree was abolished, only two courses were required of everyone—History of English Literature and Contemporary Civilization—both in the freshman year, and each student had to elect at least 12 hours from each of the three groups—humanities, sciences, and languages. By 1969 there were four groups (social science being added) and the group requirements had shrunk to two semesters of work, each, in the humanities, in a laboratory science, and in a social science, plus the ability to do at least fourth-semester college work in some foreign language, ancient or modern.

But these distribution requirements are now generally unpopular with students for various reasons: for one minority, of course, "requirement" is simply a nasty word; for another, being forced to work in areas of little interest is distasteful. But a substantial group favor some structuring of their liberal-arts curriculum but consider the present requirements trivial. They feel that the basic problem is the lack of courses, in the humanities, science, and social science divisions that are specifically designed for students not planning to major within that division. When a Physics or Spanish or Economics major elects Poetry & Prose in the Age of Milton and Religious Traditions of Asia to fulfill his humanities-group requirement, for example, however absorbing and intellectually provocative these courses may be, they scarcely acquaint him with the sweep and depth and subtlety of 25 centuries of Western European thought and culture—which presumably is what a liberal arts education is all about. At the end of March the Faculty Educational Policy Committee, believing "that the current distribution requirements do not fulfill the educational objectives for which they were devised" and that "abolition constitutes a necessary first step toward the adoption of a new pattern or structure of undergraduate education designed to meet those objectives defined by such phrases as 'general education,' 'liberal education,' and 'non-specialized curriculum,' " submitted to the full Faculty a 10-page working paper suggesting possible new approaches.

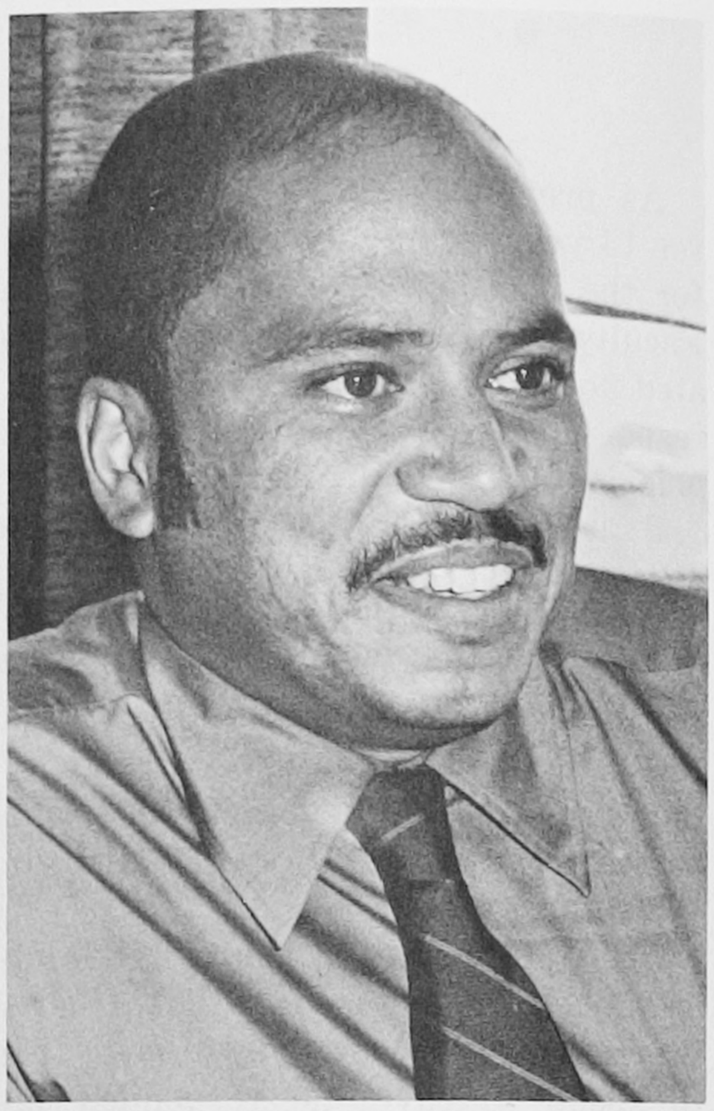
Two notable suggestions in this paper were a "Freshman Program" and, for upperclassmen, a "Perspectives Program" to complement the major. Under the proposed Freshman Program, the student would select (1) at least one "normal" course from the catalog (every course is now open to qualified freshmen upon approval of the department), (2) an independent-study project, (3) an interdisciplinary "problems" course, and (4) an interdisciplinary "analogies" course. The only distribution requirement: that the first three courses, above, represent each of the traditional divisions: humanities, sciences, social sciences. The freshman may substitute a second "normal" course for any of items (2), (3), or (4) if he wishes. Or he may substitute for the entire Freshman Program an alternate individual program which he may submit for approval by a Faculty board. Freshmen have no language requirement and no English requirement but are required to take three terms of supervised Physical Activity (Phys. Ed., community service, or crafts) of which at least one term must be Phys. Ed.

Each upperclassman would undertake both a major and a Perspectives program, the latter designed to contrast as markedly as possible with his major and thus place it in perspective. He could choose any traditional departmental major, or one of the recently adopted interdepartmental majors (Environmental Studies, French Area Studies, Spanish Area Studies, American Studies), or any of the Perspectives Programs (see below). His contrasting Perspectives Program would be selected from one of four groupings—Theory Construction and Technique, Expression and the Arts, Society and Values, and Language and Culture—but he could not choose a group that was related to his major (e.g., a psychology or sociology major could not choose Society and Values).

As an initial step toward implementing some new educational program in the liberal arts, the Faculty voted at its May meeting to abolish present distribution requirements.

Youngest Trustee

Gladstone Chandler, Jr. '55, the acting city manager of East Cleveland, has been elected a trustee of the College. At 35, Gladstone is the youngest



Gladstone Chandler, Jr. '55

Middlebury trustee since the election of Rev. Amos B. Lambert in 1840.

A poli-sci major at Middlebury, Gladstone graduated from Protestant Episcopal Seminary (Alexandria) and has done graduate work at the Washington, D.C. School of Psychiatry and at the School of Applied Science at Case Western Reserve. He has worked extensively in community service projects—YMCA work in Atlanta, Episcopal Community Service in Philadelphia, a summer project at East Moline (Ill.) Hospital, lay chaplain at Cleveland's Ingleside Psychiatric Hospital; and community relations director for the Omaha Urban League.

Entering government service as principal urban-renewal coordinator in Cleveland, Gladstone next became assistant director of community development and then assistant city manager for community development in East Cleveland. He was recently named acting city manager.

His late father, who was Class of '26, taught for 35 years at Morehouse College, Atlanta (see News Letter, Winter '69). Gladstone was elected to a three-year term as Middlebury College trustee beginning July 1, 1970.

Choir LP

Sixty-four singers and a nine-man instrumental ensemble toured four New England states during Spring vacation, singing Scarlatti, Tomkins, Vittoria, Bach, and Brahms, in Brookline, Concord, West Hartford, Darien, White Plains, and Summit (N.J.). Concerts were arranged by local Middlebury alumni groups and choir members were housed and fed in the homes of alumni. The Choir, conducted by Professor Emory Fanning, was enthusiastically acclaimed at each concert.

A stereo LP of the 1970 tour program includes four Renaissance motets, Brahms' "Warum ist das Licht gegeben," Vaughn Williams', "Valiant for Truth," three spirituals, and choral works by Tschesnokov, Lenel, and Randall Thompson. It may be mail-ordered for $4.25 from: Middlebury College Choir, Johnson Memorial Building, Middlebury, Vermont 05753.

Follow up

Within two weeks after the Recitation Hall burned on May 7th, a Middlebury freshman was arrested and after a preliminary hearing in Vermont district court at Middlebury was referred for psychiatric examination to the psychiatric consultant of the court to determine (1) whether the young man was insane at the time he was alleged to have fired the building and (2) if he was now competent to stand trial. After intensive examination the psychiatrist testified at a subsequent hearing that in his opinion the former student was legally insane at the time he was alleged to have committed the arson and that at the present time he was mentally ill. Upon request, the court agreed to continue the hearing, with the understanding that the young man submit to regular psychiatric treatment, which he is now undergoing in Burlington. Although no longer enrolled at Middlebury (having flunked out after his freshman year), he continues, by order of the court, to reside in Vermont.

Advising Montpelier

On the first Sunday following the Kent State killings last May, Vermont Governor Deane Davis called a meeting in the State House so that student leaders of campus strike activities in Vermont might air their attitudes on state and national affairs. After two more meetings over the next three weeks, the governor asked the participants at the third meeting to constitute themselves the Governors' Student Affairs Commission. They were asked to formulate during the coming summer months a set of recommendations on how Vermont's college students might contribute most usefully to the concerns of state government.

Dan Gillmor '73 was named acting chairman of the commission and organized five meetings in June, July, and August of 12 students from seven Vermont campuses, to draw up a charter of S.A.C. operations for the coming academic year. Among other things, the group recommended to the governor the appointment of one or more college students to each of 15 state boards (such as environmental quality, mental health, social welfare, education, etc.). "Students are apt to view governmental problems less in terms of established commercial interests within the state and more in terms of long-range interests of society," Dan commented. "In other words, they're more idealistic. We think this more disinterested voice should be heard in government—and right now we don't think it is. Also the educational value to the students participating would be immense, of course."

Josiah Peet '08:

Portrait of a Village Parson

This past summer Middlebury was given portraits of Josiah Peet, Class of 1808, and of his wife, Sarah, by their great-grandson Horace Peet Lowe, who with Mrs. Lowe now lives in retirement at Eastham on Cape Cod. This likeness of a member of the Class of 1808 is by several decades the oldest formal portrait of an alumnus in the College's collection.

Josiah and Sarah Peet were painted near the end of their long and useful lives by the established Boston and New York portraitist, Chester Harding (1792-1866). Harding was a self-taught and almost illiterate painter who had roamed the New England countryside in his youth doing portraits for $25 a head. He gained sufficient facility, however, that at age 32 he went to England and in three years earned $12,000 in commissions. Returning in 1827, Harding did some portraits in Montreal and then established his home and studio in Boston, where he lived until 1843, thereafter moving to New York for his last 23 years.

Josiah Peet was for 38 years pastor of the Congregational Church in Norridgewock, Maine, a village 12 miles northwest of Waterville and five miles southwest of Skowhegan. Mr. and Mrs. Lowe understand that in the 1840's the church desired to commission a portrait of their spiritual leader but the Rev. Peet was not enthusiastic. The church was successful, however, in having his wife sit for Mr. Harding and the results were apparently gratifying enough to Josiah that he was finally persuaded to sit for the matching portrait.

Josiah's great grandfather had been one of the first English settlers of Stratford, Conn. When Josiah was six, his family moved to West Haven, Vermont (west of Rutland and near the southern end of Lake Champlain). He spent part of his childhood on his brother's farm near Fair Haven and at age 20 joined the Congregational Church in that town.

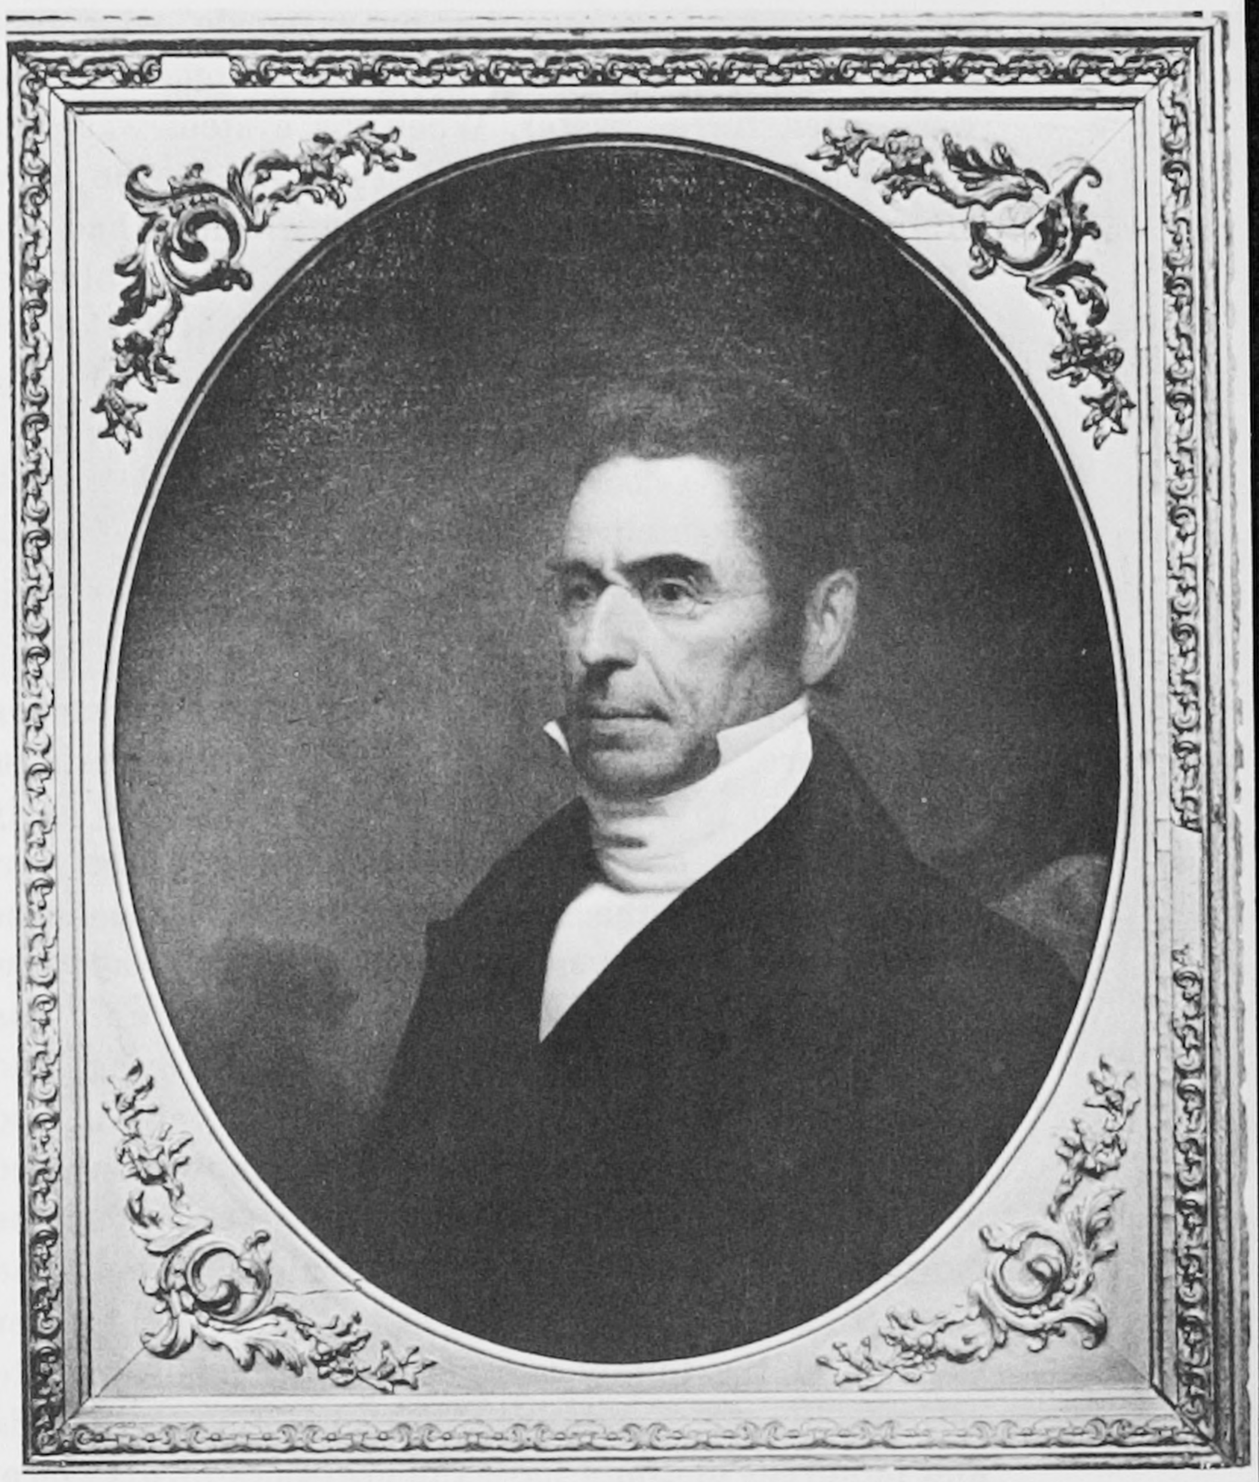
Considered by his elders a young man "remarkable for truth, conscientiousness, and fidelity," Josiah, at 22, came to a decision to devote his life to preaching the Gospel. Although he was without funds and in "precarious" health, he prepared himself and in two years entered Middlebury in 1804. In the spring of 1806 he was laid low with "typhus fever" and the following spring with influenza. Nevertheless in his junior year he was in charge of the elementary school in Orwell and while yet a senior was appointed principal of the Castleton Public Seminary, where he taught for a year after graduation (1808-09). At the end of that school year, Josiah took such savings as he had put aside and set out on horseback for Andover, Mass. where four days later he enrolled in the newly established Andover Theological Seminary. In September of 1811 the 31-year-old graduate began preaching at Chester, New Hampshire and at Durham, and in 1812 began supplying the Congregational Church in Shoreham, whose previous minister had been ejected after a split of the parishioners over a point of doctrine. In October of 1813 he was sent by the Maine Missionary Society to conduct church services for two Sundays in Norridgewock, Maine.

In 1813 Norridgewock was a town of nearly 1,000 whose three-shaded main street lay on the north bank of the Kennebec. As the shire town of Somerset County, which reached all the way to the Canadian border, it was then a more important center than Skowhegan, five miles downriver. Its Congregational Church, organized 17 years earlier, had 43 members. For the past 12 years it had had no regular pastor and the members were almost despairing of ever finding another. While stormy weather detained him in Norridgewock after the second Sabbath, some members of the village raised a subscription of $120 to obtain Mr. Peet's services halftime for the coming year.

A year later (1814) Josiah was ordained and formally installed as pastor of the church, where he was to labor for the rest of his life. He was appointed on half-time at $200 a year (raised by a "parish tax" and payable principally in farm produce) to which the Missionary Society added $300. He would preach on alternate Sundays in Norridgewock and devote the remainder of his time to "supply preaching" to some of the 16 pastorless congregations in the surrounding wilderness towns.

With his livelihood (of sorts) thus assured, Josiah returned in September to Andover Seminary and married Sarah, the niece and adopted daughter of its president, whom he had first come to know while a student boarder in the president's home. The next year, with liberal extensions of credit by the citizens of Norridgewock, Josiah built a quite spacious home for the then princely sum of $2,000. This house and the adjacent church are still in service.

Cornwallis surrendered at Yorktown and died 4 years before Woodrow Wilson's birth ...



Norridgewock's Town Meeting House, shared by the Congregationalists with the Methodists and Baptists, had been erected in 1794 for $1,600. (The bell tower was not added until 1818.) In 1813 the structure was an unfinished shell—no pews, no proper pulpit, no stairs to the second floor. It could not be heated adequately and in the winter was unusable. In other seasons, worshippers sat on planks set on blocks.

During the next 39 years, Josiah Peet working 18 to 20 hours a day organized and nurtured churches in no less than 39 Maine villages. Josiah also helped found and was president of the Norridgewock Female Academy, established in 1837 when female education was still deemed a radical notion lacking any ground either in Scripture or common sense.

From reading what his biographer and others wrote about him, one gathers the impression of a devoutly pious, wholly consecrated man, with an exceedingly modest estimate of his abilities, a tender conscience, and unaffected love for his family and concern for his parishioners—a man who felt deeply both his heavy responsibilities and his unworthiness and inadequacy to discharge them.

His sermons were not artful—he appeared to be totally without pride of self—but simple and direct, their themes dealing exclusively with problems related to the salvation of his hearers' souls. His tone was not dogmatic; he neither ranted or condemned; he seemed to speak only out of a Christ-like love for his dear friends assembled in worship.

"At the early periods of his ministry," wrote his biographer in 1854, "(Josiah's) body often had hard fare. He was the owner of a noble and spirited horse, a most faithful and efficient companion of his travels and a decided favorite with his owner. On the back of the horse or on foot in many cases, he was obliged to pursue his journeys. In cases not a few, he was, without the fault of the animal, thrown off; or with him he was in peril in fording streams, passing through sloughs or over bridges constructed of round poles, not well fixed, nor near to each other. He might stop at a house three miles distant from a place of meeting, and he would walk the distance himself, that his horse might be mounted by a female, who must else lose the privilege of hearing a sermon. His boots were often full of water. When his system was in a state least fitted to endure it, the rain or the snow often found its way to the pillow on which he had laid his head, through crevices in the wall against him, or of the roof above him. In the severest weather known in Maine, having preached on Saturday, on the Sabbath, and on Monday, he many a time reached his home at twelve o'clock of the night. But of these things he was not accustomed to speak, except in pleasantry, and to intimate friends; and of them he thought as little as he said."

"It is said to have been a common saying among stagedrivers, teamsters and others, whose business obliged them to pass his house, sometimes very early in the morning, and sometimes very late at night, that however early in the morning they passed the house of Mr. Peet, or however late at night, they always saw a light in his study. For thirty years or more, it was his habit to rise at four o'clock in the morning, and not to retire to rest till twelve o'clock at night. And none of the intervening hours of the day were wasted in idleness or useless recreation. His first work in the morning, before any of the rest of his household had risen from their beds, and his last work at night, after the rest of the family had retired, uniformly was, to retire to his closet and give thanks and pray. Hundreds and hundreds of times have the low tones of his voice, while the senses of almost all others have been locked in slumber, been heard in his study, in earnest supplication, as we doubt not, for himself and his family, his friends, his enemies, when he had enemies, his church, his people, and the world." [1]

The flavor of his thoughts can be judged best from entries in the daily journal which he kept throughout his life. The following are typical of the whole; the first was penned when he was 51, the last when he was 61:

"Oct. 27, 1831. At Farmington, attending a series of meetings. Awoke in the night. The last issue of the meeting, also my own children, two of whom were with me, my family and people, rested with such weight on my mind that I could not sleep. Felt that the blessing needed was in the hand of a Sovereign. Never did I feel more dependent."

"Nov. 28th. Awoke in the night with anxious thoughts for my family and people.

"Dec. 6th. Again engrossed in the night with anxious thoughts. My own frailty, and temporal embarrassments, the welfare of my dear family, the conversion of my children, and of others in the place who are serious, and of multitudes who are careless, deprived me of sleep."

"Jan. 1st, 1838. I think, I do increasingly desire to be useful to my people and family, and to live to better purpose; and my earnest prayer is, and has been, during the wakeful hours of the past night, that I may not only be forgiven past deficiencies and unfaithfulness, but have strength and grace to be more faithful, and efficient, and successful in the work of the ministry, and in attempts to do good."

"April 28th. Arose with a damper on my feelings, fearing that the work of God might not go forward. I went and threw myself down in my kneeling-place, in distress, for mercy. I felt to plead with earnestness, for some time, bathed in tears, that God would, in his sovereign mercy, in spite of our unworthiness, for the sake of his own glory, carry out and extend his work effectually and gloriously. I saw that he was able to do great things for us; but I obtained no assurance that he would, though it seemed I could not let him go, except he bless us. My feelings tender and solemn, through the day."

"Sabbath, March 3d, 1840. A cold stormy morning. Prospect of but few people at the sanctuary; but be they few, or many, I am called to speak to them in the name of the Lord. Who is sufficient for these things? I feel, that I am not, especially at such a time as this. Stupidity prevails; delusive error abounds; our church is in trouble. Our nation is chargeable with high-handed wickedness, and wickedness too, which is connived at, and even supported, by a majority. We are threatened with war. Already thousands are on the way to the field of battle."

"Dec. 31st, 1842. I think I can record, that during the year that has now closed, I have had more tenderness, and fervency, and earnestness of spirit, in pleading with God for mercy, for help and for grace, than heretofore. I have deeply felt my need of help from God, and unto God I have cried from day to day. Probably have never shed so many tears, in any former year, as during the past. It seems to me, that my soul has panted after God, his grace and help. It has seemed, that God was near. I could plead with him, and leave my cause with him. I have had no rapturous feeling; know not, that I have experienced any special manifestation of the light of God's countenance; yet I have felt a degree of quiet and calmness, after crying to God for help, and leaving my cause with him. Very often, when I have risen from my bed, before the light of day appeared, such a sense of my frailty, insufficiency, unworthiness and wants, has rushed upon me, that I could but fall upon my knees, and only give vent to my feelings, and plead for mercy, for a time, before I could specify any other petition." [2]

Sarah Peet's first child, a daughter, died in infancy in 1815. The town was swept repeatedly by epidemics of "malignant fever," "consumption," "brain fever," and "palsy"; and drownings and other accidents each year claimed others. Medicine throughout the world had advanced little in 2,000 years and childhood diseases were so rife that Peet's "Record of Mortality" for the town listed by name only those over 16, merely noting at the end of the year's death roll "also 12 children."

The cloud of fear looming over a village whose members are dying left and right from an affliction they are powerless to combat is suggested by Josiah's description in a letter to a friend, of scenes in his home town, West Haven, January 1813:

> "Ten days ago, I was called to part with a dear brother, by death. He fell a victim to a mortal epidemic, which has been commissioned by a righteous Sovereign, to cut down many in this place. It is supposed to be the spotted fever. It has, already, made surprising inroads upon this people, and spreads consternation in its way. In this small town, twelve grown persons have been cut off within five weeks; and I presume not less than thirty have been taken with the disease. Almost every house has been converted into a hospital. In one family, which I visited, five were sick—three in one room. I can scarcely describe the scene. In the darkened room, two or three men were employed attending them, and here and there an amazed spectator was gazing on them in silence. Beyond all expectations, these are in a fair way to recover. Among the victims were a young married couple, with whom I was formerly intimate. When the husband died, the wife was in health. In a week after, with an infant on each arm she was consigned to the grave. Her father, and her mother, followed in quick succession. There is no evidence, that any of them were prepared. The neighbor that made the coffin for my brother, and assisted in laying his corpse into it, was in just a week from that hour himself laid in a coffin. As the disease is supposed to be contagious, assistance is obtained with difficulty. A neighboring minister and some aging Christians have been around, visiting and praying with the dying and the mourning. Such a day as this, I never before witnessed.

"Immediately on learning that he (my brother) was at the point of death, I repaired to West Haven. I found, also, that his wife had been taken, the day before, with the same disease. Their eldest daughter, too, was unwell; and towards morning I was awakened by the cries of a little boy, who had just been taken. I devoted myself to my brother almost entirely, day and night, till the fourth morning, when I closed his eyes. The night following, I had scarcely retired to rest, when I was suddenly arrested by the groans of the other daughter, upon whom the disease had fixed. To her my attention was then unremittingly devoted till Saturday, when another niece, who had come to assist us, was taken ill. Since that time my task has been to nurse these two nieces." (The nieces recovered.)

As medicine was powerless against any truly virulent infection, to face down Death the people had only prayer to the Almighty. Under these conditions, Josiah's sense of the urgency of religious conversion was realistic. Since the prevailing theology allowed no hope for the souls of the unrepentant to escape eternal damnation, and no one knew when he might suddenly be struck down, simple prudence dictated that every man's first order of business be the removal of his immortal soul from jeopardy by making his peace with God. And to a pastor who was as keenly sensible of his Christian obligations as was the Reverend Peet, the peril of eternal torment in which all his unconverted neighbors were living weighed oppressively upon his conscience.

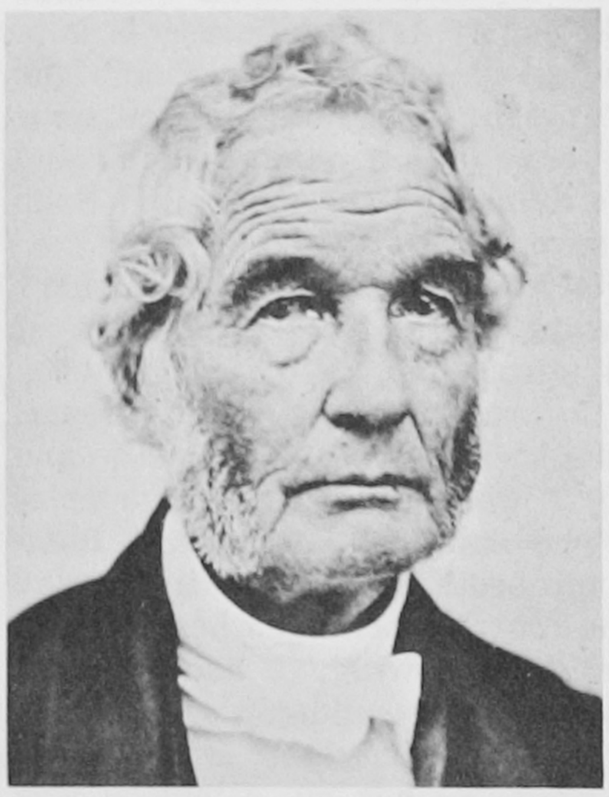
Notwithstanding Josiah's less-than-rugged constitution and his increasing devotion to the Lord's work in all seasons and in towns far from home, he lived to be 72.

In 1837 his parishioners finally were able to support his full-time services to the Norridgewock church and Josiah at age 57 was relieved of the necessity of supplying other churches some distance away. Thus for his last 15 years, Josiah was able to get out of the saddle and devote all of his time to local concerns. His son, Edward, and older daughter, Sarah, were each married and living in town; his second son, Wil-

The Six Earliest Alumni Whose

The College Archives contain individual pictures of Middlebury graduates of the 1800's—photographs taken at graduation in the case of many classes after 1864, and photos taken decades later during the mature or declining years of many graduates of earlier classes. Some Middlebury men, particularly of the earliest years, are represented by engravings, etchings, silhouettes, and photos of oil portraits. Much less than half of all graduates are represented in these files. Often, likenesses have been received from descendants years after the graduate's death—usually the old photo turned up in an attic trunk, sometimes resting with diaries, college notebooks, letters, and similar memorabilia, all of which the College archivist has welcomed as helping to round out the often skimpy record of 19th-century Middlebury.



LUTHER PALMER BLODGETT, '05

Perhaps the first child born in Cornwall, Vt. (then New Hampshire), Luther grew up on a hillside farm two miles west of Middlebury, studied theology with President Jeremiah Atwater and was ordained in 1807. Served pastorates in Rochester, Jericho, and Georgia, Vermont and in Little Falls, Sherburne, and Exeter Center, New York. Had seven sons, two daughters. At 61 retired to Cooperstown, N.Y. where he died at 89 in 1862.

CHESTER WRIGHT, '05

(1776-1840)

Born in Hanover, N.H., principal of the Addison County Grammar School, 1805-07. Gamaliel Painter's signed copy of Wright's Election Day sermon in 1805 is in the College Archives, which also has a copy of Wright's The Federal Compendium, a child's arithmetic published at Middlebury in 1810. Studied theology with Yale President Timothy Dwight and was ordained in 1809. Pastor in Montpelier for 21 years and in Hardwick, Vt. for 4 years until his death. Author of many published sermons.

DANIEL HASCALL, '06

Born in Bennington, attended school in Pawlet, Vt. Taught two years in Pittsfield, then was ordained, 1808. Pastor of Baptist Church, Elizabethtown, N.Y., for 5 years, then in Hamilton, N.Y. for 15 years. One of founders, 1815, of Hamilton Literary and Theological Institution (now Colgate Univ.). Principal and professor of Sacred Rhetoric and Ancient Languages in that school for 16 years. Educator 1836-1848 in Florence, N.Y. and Rutland, Vt. Retired to Hamilton in 1849 for last 3 years.

liam, was working in New York City but his youngest, Mary, was still at home. On the last day of 1851 as Josiah sat writing his New Year sermon, he apparently suffered a stroke which palsied his right arm. By the following Saturday his speech began to fail. On the next day, "his people assembled, as usual, at the House of God; and it was to receive a request from their minister that he might be remembered in their prayers, and hear his message to them, characteristic alike of his affection and his humility: 'I feel, my dear people, that my work is done—would that I could say, it is well done.'. . . As it was known by individuals that he had, in part, prepared a sermon for them, expecting to deliver it on that morning, it was concluded to send for it. It was brought, and read, and the assembly silently sought their homes." Josiah Peet lingered on for two weeks an invalid and died peacefully on Saturday, January 17th, 1852.

Pictures are in the College Archives

The six earliest pictures of Middlebury College graduates are shown. It is appropriate that three are pastors and three are lawyers.

Of the first 71 graduates (Classes of 1802 through 1808), 56 became either lawyers (30) or clergymen (26). But in the later classes, lawyers (as a percentage of all graduates) slumped to a low of 20% in 1820, while ministers rose to a peak of 47% in 1825. Thereafter the percentage entering the ministry faded steadily to 11% in 1860, while law, after peaks of popularity in 1830 (25%) and 1850 (34%), had slumped to 19% by 1860. (Education, on the other hand, showed a steady gain from 10% in 1810 to about 27% in the late 1850's). Over the first 60 years, better than half of each Middlebury class found careers either in law, religion, or education.

Born in Barnard, Vt., took leave of absence in senior year to enter West Point. In War of 1812 served as Captain in U.S. Volunteers. Studied law in Middlebury and practiced law in Windsor until 1843. Member of State Legislature 1818-20; Judge of Vermont Supreme Court 1823-25; president, Council of Censors of Vermont and editor of Vermont Supreme Court Reports 1827-28. At least half of Middlebury's early alumni were good and faithful servants who lived not for themselves; although many walked in the valley of the shadow of death,

THOMAS C. HENRY '14
Served Presbyterian churches in Columbia & Charleston, S.C. Self-educated in modern languages at Midd "to unprecedented extent." Died of yellow fever, 1827, after 60 days of attending epidemic victims.

"Scarcely a benevolent enterprise of considerable extent has been undertaken by the citizens of our country, in which one or more of the sons of Middlebury has not borne an agency. Scarcely a foreign missionary station has been occupied by the American churches where the moral and intellectual energies here strengthened and improved, have not been successfully and ardently devoted to the meliorization of human misery and the advancement of the divine glory."

—JOHN P. K. HENSHAW '08
addressing Alumni Assoc. in 1827

This sounds like the usual hyperbole expected at an alumni gathering when Alma Mater's virtues are extolled. But the Rev. Henshaw, then rector of St. Peter's Episcopal Church in Baltimore and later to be Bishop of Rhode Island, was here stretching the truth hardly at all.

The great moral challenges to youthful idealism for that generation were slavery, the Indians, and foreign missions. Even by 1827 when he spoke, Middlebury men of the first 24 classes had been missionaries in Palestine, Syria, India, Ceylon, and Hawaii; had been energetic spokesmen and pamphleteers against slavery at home; had been agents of the American Colonization Society in Africa; and had been working with American Indians on the frontier—risking jail terms in Georgia, for example, by helping the Cherokees when federal and state policy was to deprive them of their lands in the South and move them west of the Mississippi. In all, 231 Middlebury graduates had been ordained and many had already died at an early age because of their self-consecration.

Moreover, the tide of Middlebury men into religious service was in 1827 still rising: in the past four years the College had sent 47 men into Christian service, alone (and 9 more into education); while the next eight Classes would add another 72 pastors and missionaries (and 36 more educators).

John Hough, for 27 years an esteemed professor at Middlebury, speaking at the semi-centennial celebration in 1850, assessed the characters and contributions of no less than 33 graduates who had, by then, passed on. Of that number, 14 were clergymen and another 10 had been missionaries. As exemplars of this group, we present brief glimpses of three, only.

For sheer brilliance as a preacher, Hough gave first place to Sylvester Larned '13. Larned combined a natural elocutionary talent with first-rate scholarship and, apparently, good looks. (No portrait of him has yet been found at Middlebury.)

As a boy he once bet his brother that he could make him weep by talking to him, and soon won his wager. At 13 he gave a 4th of July oration in Pittsfield that was so good that much of it was published. After making an outstanding record at the academy in Lenox, Mass., Larned had two years at Williams where he sowed a few oats ("his irregularities," there, Hough remarks, "were known," here) before transferring to Middlebury in 1811. The following year, the same revival that swept up Fisk and Parsons converted Larned, also, and thereafter, like Augustine, all his talents were focussed in a new direction. After Middlebury, he proceeded to Andover and then to Princeton for his theological training. His first appearance in the pulpit at Princeton, Hough states, "awakened the highest expectations, and left none, who heard him, in doubt of the fervor of his devotion, the force of his intellect, or the simplicity, elevation and power of his eloquence. Admiration and love attended him, churches were thronged, wherever he preached; and the elements of moral and intellectual greatness, so embodied in his attractive countenance, in the intonations and compass of a voice, never perhaps excelled, and in an entire manner, natural, winning and impressive, were attended by an influence on every assembly, powerful and enduring."

He determined, for some reason, to go to New Orleans. "And when he had taken his station there, no enticements could allure . . . him from his post.

"The fame of his talents and eloquence, had travelled through the Union, and invitation after invitation, from wealthy churches, enforced by the appeals of private friendship, urged his retreat from the exposures of his position."

But in New Orleans "he formed a congregation and succeeded in building a church (First Presbyterian) where it had been despaired of, and warmly attached to himself hearts that to ordinary attractions were perfectly insensible," wrote a local observer. Possessing, says Hough, "a nice sense of propriety and the utmost grace and urbanity of manners, he could do well and successfully what few could safely attempt." But in his second summer in New Orleans he refused to abandon his charge when an epidemic of yellow fever threatened and was soon swept up by the disease, dying on his 24th birthday and widowing his bride in her honeymoon year. "When aware that he was attacked by that most dreadful malady," Hough concludes, "he evinced no alarm. As his disease advanced, death had no terrors for him. And almost in the parting moment, in answer to inquiries . . . the response was, 'All is well'."

Next to Larned, Hough considers that his classmate, Carlos Wilcox '13, "holds the foremost place . . . as an elegant writer of sermons and an interesting and effective preacher." Notwithstanding that in his tenth year he received an injury whose consequences were felt to the day he died, his "equanimity of temper, maturity of thought, and manliness of conduct, made a deep and enduring impression." At Middlebury he won top scholastic honors and was valedictorian of his class. He was also a nature poet of some grace and facility, if the lines Hough read to the alumni were representative. Despite his weakness and the suffering caused by his long-standing infirmity, Wilcox was an effective preacher and in 1824 was invited to become pastor of North Church in Hartford upon the death of Dr. Strong, their venerated and widely influential minister. "His style was dignified, flowing, and correct. With, perhaps, some tendency to diffuseness and some redundancy of ornament, he had a fund of noble and impressive thoughts and when he spoke, every ear was open to hear and every eye was fixed to behold. His countenance was full of life and expression; his voice was clear and musical, yet thrilling in its intonations; his elocution was animated and touching; and his action graceful and impressive. Seldom has a young man been heard, with a more absorbing attention, or with higher delight, or larger advantage." When Wilcox succumbed to Death three years later, in Danbury, his Hartford congregation "insisted on removing his remains from the place of their original interment" and depositing them in their own churchyard beside those of Dr. Strong.

Sometime in his last two years, Wilcox commemorated in verse six classmates at Andover who were already dead: five were Middlebury graduates (Allen, '12, Andrus '12, Larned '13, Fisk '14, and Parsons '14); the sixth, A. M. Fisher, was a young professor at Yale who had died in a shipwreck on the Irish coast. To the alumni gathered in the Congregational Church on that August morning in 1850, Hough quoted these lines by Wilcox:

> "Ye were a group of stars, collected here,
> Some mildly glowing, others sparkling bright.
> Here rising in a region calm and clear,
> Ye shone a while, with intermingled light.
> Then parting each pursuing his own flight,
> O'er the wide hemisphere, ye singly shone;
> But, ere ye climb'd to half your promised height,
> Ye sunk, with bright'ning glory round you thrown;
> Each left a brilliant track, as each expired, alone."

But no Middlebury graduate's death drew so deep an emotional response throughout New England as that of Levi Parsons '14. As witness, the General Catalog of the College shows that a number of children born to alumni between 1820 and 1835 were named "Levi Parsons."* The only available likeness, a frontispiece in the "Life of Levi Parsons" by his brother-in-law, Daniel Morton '12, suggests that he was not blessed with the Byronic profile of Brother Larned '13, but all who knew him agreed that his was an uncommonly beautiful spirit. ". . . A very devoted Christian of highly respectable talents and various learning, he was accomplished as a man—in disposition, manners, and address fitted to find a welcome access everywhere and to adorn the most intelligent and refined society. He was eminently characterized by a graceful and dignified mildness of demeanor, a readiness of utterance and action . . ." But his piety, Hough continues, "was by far his brightest ornament. . . . There were seasons in which a sacred sweetness and serenity of temper and a heavenly elevation of thought and feeling seemed to pervade his whole soul."

Levi was raised in comfortable circumstances in Goshen, Mass., where his father was a minister. In 1810 the family moved to Whiting, Vermont and Levi entered Middlebury. After an incredibly intense period of spiritual sweating during the fall of his sophomore year, Levi finally achieved a sense of personal salvation and by the following April confided to his diary, "I frequently think of spending my life as a missionary to the heathen. This consideration sometimes fires me with uncommon zeal. I hope God will cause me to know his will, make me willing to go wherever he pleases, prepare me to fight his battles, and afterwards receive me to his kingdom."

Graduating in 1814 from Middlebury and in 1817 from Andover, Levi was ordained in 1817 as a missionary under direction of the ABCFM. As was the custom, he was sent alone through New England and New York state as an agent of the American Board to preach and raise a subscription to support his overseas mission. In 19 months of this labor, from Calais, Maine to Buffalo, Parsons raised an exceptional total of $6,000. (The largest single subscription—$500—came from Cambridge, Mass.) Three weeks before sailing, with classmate Pliny Fisk, from Central Wharf in Boston, Levi made a last trip to Vermont, visiting friends in Pittsfield, Shoreham, and Middlebury, and preaching on the Sabbath in Hancock. The students at Middlebury presented to Parsons "a handsome collection of classical works in 55 volumes for the use of the mission library in Judea" and Prof. Hall gave him a box of mineral samples for study on the high seas.

Parsons and Fisk landed at Smyrna in January, 1820, and after four months, in which they visited Greek Orthodox churches, Jewish synagogues, and Muslim mosques—talking at length with adherents of every faith—and organized the Smyrna Bible Society, they retired to the island of Chios in May and for the next 6 months studied languages (Italian, modern Greek, and Arabic) at the college, there, in preparation for their mission to Jerusalem. In December they sailed from Smyrna for Joppa and thence on foot to Jerusalem in mid-February. They devoted March and April to the distribution in Jerusalem of tracts and psalters published in the six native languages of the area—Arabic, Greek, "Persian," Armenian, Italian, and French.

*One, a nephew, Levi Parsons Morton (Hon.'82), was to found banking houses in New York and London that would make him one of the wealthiest men of his day, and Vice-President under Benjamin Harrison (1888-92).

The entire Near East at that time was seething. The 500-year-old Ottoman Empire was starting to erode at the edges and the customary despotic response—tightening the screws of terror—was seen in every quarter. The Greeks were in revolt, Czarist agents were fomenting trouble in the empire wherever they could, and the Turks reaped bloodily with their scimitars from dawn till sunset prayers. Both Greeks and Turks were stopping ships bearing pilgrims to or from Jerusalem and summarily decapitating any of the enemy nationality, women and children not excepted. In the following April (two months after Levi died) the Turks would land on Chios and burn all 40 villages and 86 churches to the ground (including the college and its library); more than 25,000 were put to the sword, burned, or drowned and another 41,000—many of these women and children—were sold into slavery. This was their reward for, in Morton's words, "rearing the standard of independence at so early a period of the Greek struggle."

While Parsons and Fisk were proselytizing in Jerusalem in May, all Greeks in Palestine were suddenly ordered to surrender their arms, and the Russian consul at Joppa was arrested. Due to the general panic and civil disorder that ensued, the pair decided to retreat to Chios for the summer and await developments. Reaching Samos, they found they couldn't get to Chios (because of the Turks), so they went to the Cycladean island of Syra (Siros, today), arriving in June. At the end of August Levi was attacked suddenly "with a distressing malady which was of long continuence" . . . the disease of which he would die 5½ months later in Alexandria. With a high fever, "for twenty days I was left without reason," he later wrote his sister and brother-in-law in Shoreham, "and have no correct recollection of what passed around me." He was nursed through this period by the local English consul in whose home he was staying. His severe and persistent diarrhea suggests that he may have suffered some form of dysentery, such as that which would afflict Byron a year or two later at Missolonghi. Levi confided to his diary, "I cry in the bitterness of my soul. It is difficult to leave myself at the divine disposal, and to say, life or death as thou pleasest. I do desire life with a great and constant desire; not to return to America, not to see my friends, but to see Palestine, to see our mission established, to preach the gospel to the heathen. But God hides his face. I am in trouble. I would, and yet I do not. I perceive no advancement in grace, no increase of strength against temptation. My hope is feeble, trembling."

When he was sufficiently recovered to travel, he returned to Smyrna in early December, was reunited there with Pliny, and stayed at the English consul's compound, in the same apartment he had left 12 months before to go to Jerusalem. On New Year's Day, 1822, he wrote his brother, "My health is very much reduced. It is the decided opinion of the doctor of Smyrna, of brother Fisk, and of my other friends, that I should sail immediately for Alexandria in Egypt." And a week later he adds to the same letter, "The captain says we must sail this evening or tomorrow. I look forward with some solicitude, as my health is very critical. I have however here the same kind heavenly Protector as in America. After God has saved me from death a thousand times, I must not, (by his grace) I will not be afraid."

Parsons and Fisk reached Alexandria on January 13 and after four weeks without noticeable improvement, Levi died at 4:00 A.M. on February 10th.

Toward the end of a long conversation the previous evening, Pliny "expressed a wish that God might place underneath him the arms of everlasting mercy. He replied, 'The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him.' These were the last words I heard him utter." He had written in his journal a few days before, "My mortal frame is growing weaker and weaker, and is just ready to dissolve into dust; but my immortal spirit grows more and more vigorous, and is about to take wing from its prison of flesh. The world is fading away and receding from my view, while heaven is coming nearer and growing brighter. The earth will soon vanish forever, and all will then be heaven."

Of the 912 men in the Classes of 1803 to 1835, inclusive, 303 became clergymen; of these, 15 became "home missionaries" to settlers or to Indians on the frontiers, and another 16 became foreign missionaries. Among these 303 Middlebury men were the first agent of the American Colonization Society (settling freed slaves in Africa) to Sierra Leone (Andrus '12), the first governor of the freed-slave colony of Liberia (Ashmun '16), the founding editor of the Burlington (Vt.) Free Press (Foote '18), the first Presbyterian minister in Illinois (Bliss '12), the foremost missionary to the Sandwich Islands, now Hawaii (Bingham '16), the inventor of the fountain pen (Cleveland '24), the first official fund raiser for the College (Hand '22), a future president of the College (Kitchel '35), future presidents of seven other colleges (Beman '07, Linsley '11, Beman '18, Olin '20, Blanchard '22, Fitch '25, Owen '28), missionaries to the Cherokee, the Osage, and the Nez Percé (Thompson '26, Pixley '11, Smith '34), missionaries to Turkey and the Near East (Fisk '14, Parsons '14, Ladd '31), to India (Graves '12, Frost '20, Munger '28, Muzzy '33), to Ceylon (Warren '08, Winslow '15), to Siam (Caswell '31, Hemenway '35), to China (Peet '34), and to Hawaii (Bingham '16, Spaulding '28, Smith '34), as well as itinerant or stationed pastors in every state and territory of the Union.

Occasionally one man might serve in all three fields. Asa Bowen Smith '34, for example, went from home missions to foreign missions to New England parishes to home missions, again, in a full 52 years of continuous service after graduation. (We are indebted for the information following to a Memorial Sketch by A. C. Hodges, 1889, in the College Archives).

Asa Bowen Smith was born in Williamstown, Vermont (south of Barre) in 1809, the year Josef Haydn died and Abraham Lincoln and Charles Darwin were born. In his sister's words, "His father did not believe in giving boys their time before they were of age, so he stayed upon the farm till he was twenty-one. He prepared for college almost solely by studying at home and reciting to a lawyer in town. The desk at which he stood to study was the work of his own hands. His anxiety to progress rapidly led him to take his Latin book to the sugar camp, one season, with the view of combining work and study. The experiment was not deemed satisfactory by his father." But as soon as Asa reached his 21st birthday, he enrolled in the University of Vermont. He had a scholarship and he practiced economy by preparing his own meals in his room, beginning with a chest of provisions brought from home. The next spring he was converted during a revival sweeping Burlington, joined the church in Williamstown in July, and spent the hot weather so tirelessly promoting a "protracted meeting" of revival, there, that he was soon flat in bed with "typhus." MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE

HONOR ROLL OF DONORS

Before I pass the leadership of Annual Giving to my successor, George H. (Pete) Bostwick, Jr. '58, I would like to express heartfelt thanks to all of you who have helped to make this past year a great one for Middlebury. Annual Giving has received more money from more people than at any other time in our history. Middlebury's alumni have set records in all departments and Middlebury's parents have followed suit with a record-breaking performance of their own.

The money raised this year ($294,820) is equivalent to the income of about $6,000,000 in endowment funds. It is different from endowment income, however, for each year we must go out and do it over again—better. So under Pete Bostwick's leadership, let's do just that.

Susan Lockwood Lewis, Sec.
29 South St.
Middlebury, Vt. 05753

As we prepare for the third issue of our expanded column, we note the increased volume of letters now coming to Middlebury. We learn that Dr. Jim Sweatt is a resident in thoracic and cardiovascular surgery at the University of Texas, Southwestern Medical School. He is currently living at 726 Scottsboro, Dallas. Also at the University of Texas is Tony Hilfer who writes that he is an associate professor of English. Having published one book last year, Tony is at work on a book on black comedy. Material from alums should be sent to 1903 David Street, Austin, Texas. Also out West is Margaret (Lascelle) Loghry who travels with her husband Jim throughout the West, including Canada and Mexico: Jim works for National Lead Company and Marge is his "girl Friday"—receptionist, secretary, and draftswoman. They still find time for hiking, skiing, and photography, although they're raising Mike (4) and Beth (2½). When they're in one place long enough, it is 2121 East Monte Vista Drive, Tucson, Arizona. Further west is Carol (Waldorf) Lohr who currently resides with husband Jerry at 19802 Charters Avenue, Saratoga, California. Jerry's firm is building 350 custom homes and 10,000 apartment units. Sounds like Milt Peterson and Bob Batal. Bob VonBargen makes his home in Torrance, California. Following a summer in Europe with his wife Sigrid and daughters Kristina and Andrea, Bob is settling down in the routine of calling on specialists for the Urology Division of Bristol-Laboratories, a division of Bristol-Myers.

Vermont appears to have its share of alums. Hoping to take in a football game this fall is Leland Blodgett from Essex Junction who is working as a vocational counselor for the Vermont Employment Service. Helen (Dickey) Curtis resides in historic Shelburne and invites all stopping at the Museum next summer to pay a visit. In Burlington Nancy (Gurney) Hayes is raising three children, being a "house mother" to four college boys who rent part of their home, and trying to keep them all out of husband Jerry's office in the other part of the house; life as a podiatrist must be a little hectic under those conditions. Margaret (Dodd) Jones calls Bennington home while Shep is in Korea. Her new neighbors this fall will be Elizabeth and "Red" Kelly who have moved to Bennington following their retirement. Bill Locke has been promoted by Armstrong Cork to manager of Environmental Building Systems and assistant manager of Architectural Sales. Gale Lorenzen has had one year of teaching kindergarten in the Springfield school system. In the winter she enjoys skijoring behind her Morgan "Charlie Brown." Horseback riding or cross-country skiing can be enjoyed by contacting Gale at Box 271 A., RD 2 in Springfield. Joanna (Taft) Maynard is in Shrewsbury (southeast of Rutland). Taffy and Hull ('56) keep busy with real estate and insurance. Chris Bowlen Newton has returned to Vermont and helps run the Charles Newton Stable in Bradford. Training and boarding horses is their full-time occupation (besides bringing up two young boys).

We've deliberately omitted the Middlebury people, but will cover that contingent in a future issue. A long letter from Skid Rowe ('55 & '58) came in response to last spring's telephone call. After 12 years as a professional-employee-benefit consultant at the insurance-company level, Skid is now an independent insurance broker-consultant, specializing in employee benefits and business and individual life-insurance planning. "Rather than simply hanging out a shingle, I became associated with Morton Smith, Inc. (Providence, R. I.) where I share space and to a large degree, clientele. I expect soon to establish a new corporation which will be a mass-marketing operation." Sounds interesting and keep us informed, Skid. Tibor Guthin extends an invitation to any classmates to call if in the Hawaiian Islands. He is Branch Manager for Xerox Corporation covering the Islands and all U.S. possessions and Trust Territories throughout the Pacific. Tibor and his wife live at 1918 Alewa Drive, Honolulu 96814. Duncan Wilson was awarded a Master of Science and Management degree by the Alfred Sloan School of Management at MIT in September. We hope that all '58ers will continue to keep us appraised of news in your corner of the world.

Ailene Kane Rogers (Mrs. Edward) is a volunteer teacher in the natural science program at the Suffolk Museum. Her address is 5 Auburn Ct., Centereach, N.Y. 11720. Major Joel Roberts has graduated from the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College at Ft. Leavenworth, Kan. He is scheduled for reassignment in Korea. Gustaf Wollmar is a real estate broker and associate with Hill and Co. of 2107 Union St., San Francisco 94123. Richard Conrad received an MBA degree from Baruch College of the City of New York in June. Dr. Frederick Swan has been appointed acting chairman of the School of Natural Sciences at West Liberty (W. Va.) State College. Frederick Twichell received an MA in Liberal Studies from Wesleyan in June.

from his couch, however, he was sufficiently persuasive to convert his father and see him sign the pledge of temperance (read "abstinence") and to convert his brother, John, who was to serve as missionary to Ceylon for 30 years.

Two Middlebury students, Hiram Carleton '33 and Calvin Noble '34, being present at the revival meetings, Asa left UVM at the end of his sophomore year following, and enrolled at Middlebury, whence he graduated in 1834. A year at Andover and a year at Yale Divinity followed, as Asa prepared himself for a foreign mission. In November of 1837, he was ordained in his hometown church to serve in Siam. But the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions (ABCFM) decided that he was needed more in the Oregon Territory where Marcus Whitman had begun a mission to the Indians at Walla Walla in 1834.

In March, 1838 Asa married Sarah Gilbert White of West Brookfield, Massachusetts (west of Worcester) and the couple at once set out, overland, for Independence Landing, Missouri to join a missionary party of seven who were heading for Oregon. Asa was then 28. The party that headed west-northwest from the Missouri frontier on April 23rd for the 2,000 mile ride included Smith, Walker, Eells, and Gray and their wives, and a Mr. Rogers. "There is much more danger attending the journey than we had supposed," wrote Mrs. Eells. "Since we left the States, we have found that horseback riding in imagination, and in reality, are two different things. We rise at half-past three in the morning. During considerable part of the way we are liable to be met by war parties of wild Indians; and if we are not sufficiently strong, our animals may all be stolen, and we left to wander in the wilderness with savages and wild beasts. The first week after we left Independence, Missouri, three of our best horses, which cost two hundred dollars, were stolen. In four or five weeks another became lame, so that we were obliged to sell him at half price. I believe we agree that no pen can paint the realities of this journey so that anyone who has not tried will understand it."

Mrs. Walker was usually cheerful, even when others were down-hearted. But one day, when they were camped on the north fork of the Platte, it rained very heavily; and, worse still, the water was rising on the river flats. Mrs. Smith entered the tent of Mrs. Walker, found her things piled up and everything wet, while she, in rather an odd position, was shedding tears.

"Why, Mrs. Walker," she exclaimed, "what is the matter?"

"I am thinking how comfortable my father's hogs are!" she replied.

Almost two months later as they crossed Salt River Pass (near the Wyoming-Idaho border), Sarah Smith wrote in her journal, "We rode over frightful places today. Our path lay along the side of the Rocky Mountains, about one hundred feet above the base, where flowed the Salt River. The bank was very steep, with the appearance of having been washed away by the river. There were projecting rocks in this path, leaving often not more than eight inches for our horses to walk in. The mountain was full of rolling slatestones, which, as the animals stepped on them, would slip from under their feet and fall down the mountain. Mr. Smith rode forward, I went next to him, and Mrs. Walker behind me. Her horse wished to go faster than mine, so she was continually saying to me, 'Go faster, go faster, or my horse will fall!' So I was obliged to urge mine along as fast as I could; for surely, had our horses fallen, or made one misstep, we must have met our death. Perhaps you will say, 'Why did you not get off and walk?' Because we dared not walk; had we attempted it, we must have gone to the bottom."

The party reached Whitman's mission at Walla Walla in late August and the following spring Asa and Sarah Smith established a mission to the Nez Percés at Kamiah (now in Idaho) on the Salmon River. "On arriving here," Asa wrote, "I built a house of cedar to answer our purpose for the summer and, without a chair or table, commenced my studies. Our house was made by grooving posts and settling them in the ground, and filling the sides with split cedar. The roof was made of dirt. Our floor is the ground; our windows are cracks between the timbers; our door is made of cedar, split with an ax. At my leisure, I have made some stools to sit on and a table, by splitting a log, and putting legs into it."

Asa was busy transcribing the Nez Percé language into English syllables so that, with a basic dictionary in hand, he might begin to publish religious tracts and portions of the New Testament in the Indians' tongue. In the first year he succeeded in taking down some 10,000 words and alphabetically transcribing 7,000 of these. He was greatly aided by a young Nez Percé named Lawyer, who was already able to read English better than any other Indian and who would become tribal chief in 1867. In 1839, the Honolulu mission sent to the Oregon mission a printing press worth $450 and a printer to run it; with this equipment was printed that fall the first tract in the Nez Percé language—which was also, so far as is known, the first book printed west of the Rocky Mountains. At the request of the mission Asa prepared a small book of chapters from the New Testament, and assisted in the completion of a hymnal; aided by Lawyer and Mr. Rogers, he also completed a Nez Percé vocabulary and grammar.

After two years at Kamiah, Asa's health was impaired and his wife was now so invalided she could be moved only by canoe. Hence, they set out downstream in April 1841 and after two weeks in Walla Walla, proceeded to Vancouver (on the Columbia River opposite Portland). The climate there being little better, they determined for Sarah's health to embark for the Sandwich Islands. They arrived in Honolulu in January and applied to the American Board for permission to join the mission, there. With permission granted by return mail (six months later), they began a ministry at Waialua on the northwest coast of Oahu.

After three years of service in Waialua, during much of which Sarah Smith continued bedridden, Asa lost his voice. The family left Honolulu in October 1845 and sailing by way of Canton and the Cape of Good Hope reached New York the following May, where he was released from service by the ABCFM. Asa was now 37 years old.

Having recovered his voice in some measure, he began preaching in South Amherst, Mass. in November and after a year and a half was elected pastor of the Congregational Church in Buckland, a Berkshire village west of Greenfield, where he served for 11 years (1848-59). In May, 1855, wife Sarah died at age 41 of the consumption she had contracted in the rude hut at Kamiah. A year later Asa married, at age 47, 30-year-old Harriet Nutting of South Amherst, who had been teaching school in Ohio and was to be his helpmate for the remaining 30 years of his life.

Leaving Buckland in 1860, Asa became acting pastor for the next 11 years in Southbury, Connecticut and then thinking to somewhat retire at 62, purchased a homestead in Rocky Hill, in the Connecticut River valley between Hartford and Middletown.

Asa Smith continued for 12 years in Rocky Hill, "supply preaching" there and in surrounding towns. In the spring of 1883 he and Harriet travelled to Tennessee to visit her sister and brother-in-law in a settlement called Sherwood near the Alabama border and about 40 miles west of Chattanooga. Sherwood was a settlement of Minnesotans who, led by former Minnesota Lieutenant-Governor Sherwood, had purchased 13,000 snow-free acres there, and begun a new colony. After a two-month summer visit, during which Asa was persuaded to preach at the local pastorless church, the Smiths returned to Rocky Hill. But the urgings of the Sherwood people that the Smiths take over their church followed them home, and that November, facing at age 75 another Connecticut winter, they returned to Sherwood and Asa took over the leadership of a newly organized Union Church (non-denominational).

During the next two years he also helped organize a Negro church in Whiteside, Tennessee, 41 miles away. It was on a January trip to Whiteside that Asa caught a cold which developed into pneumonia and killed him three weeks later at age 77. His widow, Harriet, returned to Rocky Hill in February but died that summer, aged 60.

WHAT'S HAPPENED TO COLLEGE COSTS?

A three-fold growth in U.S. college enrollments in the past 20 years has required capital outlays by colleges and universities that have more than duplicated the entire academic plant of 1950. □ Of all U.S. 18-to-21-year-olds in 1980, 70% will be enrolled in some college. Because his tuition and fees do not cover actual costs of his education, every new student represents a net loss to his college's budget. Meanwhile, expenditures per student by U.S. colleges have already risen 78% (in 1950 dollars) and will increase another 15% in the 1970s. □ Last year many prestigious and solidly circumstanced Ivy League universities reported substantial operating deficits—some for the first time—and were projecting larger deficits in this year and next. □ At the same time parents are being socked with higher and higher charges for their offsprings' education, until it appears that the first-rate colleges may have priced their services forever beyond the reach of middle-class families.

Walter E. Brooker '37

In a recent conversation with the College's vice president for development, Walter E. Brooker '37, we asked for his personal impressions of the financial picture confronting a private liberal arts college like Middlebury. Portions of this taped conversation are reproduced, here.

Mr. Brooker: A very thoughtful parent letter last spring, addressed to the chairman of our Parents Fund, stated that the writer couldn't make a parent's gift to Middlebury because he felt the College was extracting about the last ounce of flesh that he had. It was written not so much in a critical way as in a wondering way, asking, "Where will this all end?" He said that at his own institution, which happened to be Wesleyan—another small private college—the tuition charges were comparable; he knew his daughter was getting an excellent education at Middlebury but he was concerned with the ever increasing tuition charges.

In attempting to respond to his letter I developed an analysis of our costs going back over a 30-year span from June 1939 to June 1969. I must admit I was alarmed to find that during this 30-year period, in which our student enrollment increased but 96.5%, the actual cost of running the institution went from $408,000 to almost $8,000,000—an increase of 1876%. And my review also indicated very plainly that whereas the student bore 64.3% of the cost of attending Middlebury in 1939, that share had now increased to 79%.

Incidentally, this increase occurred despite the fact that during this period expendable gift income, which was minimal for the 1939 year (some $16,000 or 4.1%), by 1969 had increased to $1,000,000, and accounted for 13.4% of the cost of running the institution.

Q: Now the other substantial source of college income is earnings on endowment. Your figures suggest that that income as a percentage of total cost has been steadily falling too. Why is that?

B: That's true. Endowment just hasn't kept pace with steadily increasing costs resulting from the inflationary economy and the growth of our physical plant. It's somewhat discouraging to note that in 1939 when Middlebury's endowment (book value) was only $4,398,000, endowment income was accounting for 31.6% of our operating costs, whereas by 1969 even though the endowment had increased to $17,500,000 (book value)—a 296.7% increase—the income it produced was now covering but 7.6% of the total cost of running the institution.

Q: And this doesn't reflect a decreased return on investment, but rather a total increase in the cost of operation?

B: Basically, yes.

Q: And if each student produces, in effect, a net loss to the College, as you expand your enrollment you increase your deficit, that is you increase the amount of money that you have to raise each year to stay in the black.

B: But, we can't blame all of this on inflation—which I'll come to in a moment—or even on larger enrollments, because what we've seen here at Middlebury in recent years has been a tremendous increase in our instructional facilities. We have a superbly equipped campus in terms of teaching needs for a gifted faculty and lively student body. But the growth of our academic plant has far outstripped our growth in endowment. Just as a family finds when they add a room to a house or move from a 7-room house to a 9-room house living costs rise appreciably, so does a college find when it adds a new teaching facility that its costs have gone up dramatically.

Q: So this improvement in total facilities at the College has proceeded at a greater pace than the increase in enrollment, alone, would account for? The actual quality of the education being offered to each student is higher and therefore more expensive than 30 years ago?

B: That's right. Our educational aspirations have grown—and continue to grow. And, we've recently been through what is commonly referred to as a "knowledge explosion."

Q: How does this affect costs?

B: Well, directly, in terms of meeting library needs, in terms of expensive scientific apparatus for research—the growth of independent research and study on the part of the student automatically puts a greater burden on the library from the standpoint of the research facilities available there; almost every new development in science, certainly in the teaching of science, is reflected immediately in equipment costs for the Science Center.

Q: Is this what you meant by raising our sights, raising our educational aspirations?

B: Yes, but this has been going on steadily throughout the history of the College. There's always been a race to find the resources necessary to meet educational expectations.

Q: To what extent has inflation affected the cost of running the College—in terms of faculty salaries, in terms of equipment, and so on?

B: Instructional costs have increased over a 30-year span by more than $6,000,000. The Middlebury of 1939 had total instructional costs of $259,000, whereas for the year that ended June 30, 1969, the comparable figure was $6,263,000.

Q: And, I suppose, this increase partly reflects a fairer salary scale for the teaching profession over that 30-year period?

B: Well, teachers' remuneration should quite properly follow what's happening in the national economy. We are just commencing to catch up with the frightful lag in teaching salaries that followed World War II. That's part of it, but the cost of teaching aids and supplies, also, have increased substantially. Total instructional costs during this period increased 1082%. Library costs have increased 1083%. The greatest dollar increase has been in the cost of plant operation—reflecting a greatly expanded campus. Here the increase is 1671%.

In 1969, you realize, there were more operating deficits being experienced by private colleges and universities throughout the country than at any time in our history. And the forecast is that that rather unenviable record will be surpassed in the current year. Many of these institutions are experiencing a deficit for the first time in their history. During these recent trying years Middlebury has managed to avoid deficits but only because of the steady growth of our Annual Giving program.

Q: Some people ask, "Why shouldn't tuition and fees be set at a level that pays for 100% of the cost of the student's education?"

B: Traditionally colleges and universities have never charged what the educational services they provided actually cost. As I noted earlier, the student, or more accurately the student's parents, are now absorbing a steadily increasing percentage of the total cost of running the institution.

Q: What would be the effect on the College if tuition were set at a level which fully covered college costs? How would it affect college enrollment?

B: We would just move further along the road we are now commencing to worry about in private higher education—that we may end up as an institution that can be attended only by youngsters from families of very affluent circumstances—or from greatly disadvantaged circumstances where maximum student aid is available to meet their needs. This is something that is now a very real concern to private colleges and universities everywhere.

Q: That they not shut themselves off from the great middle-class market?

B: . . . Which could easily commence to turn, in ever-growing numbers, to the publicly supported institutions, the state colleges and universities, the municipal colleges. A good student body should represent all portions of the economic spectrum and all segments of society.

Q: You say that parents are now paying an increasing share of the cost of their offspring's education. How much have tuition costs actually increased?

B: It's easy to give a dollar figure—tuition, board, room and fees in 1960 at Middlebury was about $1,020, and today it's $3,796—but each year it's being paid in inflated dollars, of course. An interesting study just published by the Council for Financial Aid to Education* shows that on the national average, college tuition increased 7½% a year between 1950 and 1962, but that in the past eight years, increases in tuition costs have only kept pace with the rise in personal disposable income for those years. That is, while tuition has risen an even 6% a year, per capita income after taxes has risen 5.9% a year. And in the 1970's, the study estimates a continued increase in personal after-tax income of 5% but an average increase in tuition and fees of only 3% a year on a per-student basis. This may be small comfort to parents struggling with today's college costs, but the fact remains that tuition charges, at least, are merely staying even with personal income.

But from the college's point of view, of course, tuition payments meet only a part of the actual cost of educating the student. Our mission in the Development Office is to make up the difference, to keep the College out of the red.

Q: In view of the tremendous operating-cost increases and the growing numbers of colleges and universities now facing serious deficits for the first time, and considering that substantial tuition hikes would only defeat our educational goal—isn't some form of federal subsidy to higher education inevitable? Otherwise, how can the private liberal arts colleges stay open?

B: A number of plans for federal subsidy have been proposed: a federal grant to the student, a low-interest loan to the student for up to 100% of his four-year costs, a direct grant to the college for each student enrolled, and so forth. Every plan suggested has some inadequacies or some unwanted "side effects" and I see little likelihood that Washington will provide a total solution to the fiscal problems of private colleges and universities. Certainly not in the foreseeable future. Furthermore, our private, gift-supported institutions zealously cherish their independence.

I must admit I am impressed with the growing number of states such as New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois that are now providing significant assistance to their private colleges. These new aid programs give recognition to the educational services being provided by the private institutions within the state and acknowledge the fact that without their services massive amounts of additional tax funds would be needed to provide more public institutions to educate the youth in the state. New York's program, for example, would provide us an annual operating grant of some $250,000 to $300,000 if Middlebury were located in that state.

Q: Well, how can a small, liberal-arts college stay solvent in the next ten years, faced with the trends we're looking at today? What are the necessary steps for a college to stay alive—and better yet, healthy?

B: Basically there are two steps, an internal step and an external step; the internal step is obviously doing the best possible job of limiting expenditures to meaningful, necessary needs and achieving maximum use of our facilities. We can point to the efficient use of our campus throughout the year; our nine summer language schools have an enrollment nearly as large as the regular winter session. Nevertheless, we have to review our budget commitments with a very sharp eye.

The external step is attempting through the Development Office to help the President and his Board secure greater gift support. This gift support must meet two critical areas of need, sustaining support and increased endowment resources.

Q: What does 'sustaining support' mean?

B: 'Sustaining support' describes the gift dollars which are necessary for current operations. Here you have the unrestricted spendable gift dollar produced by Annual Giving which the institution uses in its area of greatest need (currently that's to support faculty salaries), supplemented by the dollars that come in from individuals, foundations, and corporations expendable for specific operating uses such as scholarships, research, and purchase of teaching aids. (This latter, of course, would include spendable income for books for the library, works of art for the new Johnson Gallery, and laboratory equipment for the Science Center.)

Q: How did we do this year in gift support?

B: We've just had the best gift year in many years and certainly since the Challenge Fund of 1963, '64, and '65. Furthermore, this gift support fell in the two areas most vital to us as an institution —namely, Annual Giving and other gifts toward operating support, on the one hand, and on the other, sizeable gifts to endowment: gifts creating a new professorship, a number of new scholarships, and for such important aids as library acquisitions and building maintenance.

Total sustaining support was at an all-time

high. Annual Giving went way above its budgeted goal of $260,000: the final result was $294,000, almost $295,000. We mustn't lose sight of the fact that it was a budgeted goal and when it was put into the budget on the income side not a dollar of that $260,000 had yet been received. The fact that it came in during the year from alumni, parents, and friends, meant that we were able to close the books on June 30th without an operating deficit. I believe that our improving performance in Annual Giving reflects a growing awareness on the part of our alumni of the importance of sustaining support. It also reflects the fact that our able young Mr. Sommers is now giving full time to this important area, as evidenced by the changes he's made in the Class solicitation structure, the highlighting of an intensive Annual Giving effort by the reunion classes, and the broadening of the base of leadership gifts—gifts in the $100-and-up categories. Meanwhile, of course, this has relieved me of major concerns in the sustaining-funds area so that I can concentrate on capital gifts—which are equally important because of our urgent need for increased endowment.

Q: Why is Annual Giving budgeted each year? Why are you asking parents and alumni to contribute to the support of the College when no other business operates this way, but simply charges its full costs to the customer?

B: Why is Annual Giving budgeted? Quite simply, it's budgeted because otherwise we would have to restrict the educational services that we want to provide. If the $300,000 from Annual Giving which is budgeted for the 1970-71 year wasn't over on the income side of the ledger, we would be forced to cut out some educational activities, some educational services, that are reflected on the expense side of the ledger—or face a deficit.

Q: Or further increase tuition and fees on the income side?

B: Or increase tuition and fees, which, as you know, have increased substantially as it is.

Q: Turning then from sustaining support, how does Middlebury stand with endowment support?

B: Historically this College, of course, has tended to be underendowed in comparison with sister institutions, particularly in New England, with which it competes. Our next big capital effort at Middlebury will aggressively seek a substantial improvement in the College's endowment resources.

Q: What's the value to a college of endowment? We spoke a while ago of occasional years of deficit in the past; is this why a college tries to have an endowment—as a cushion for hard times? Or do you seek an endowment in order to have an assured annual income from your endowment investment to meet current operating expenses?

B: Both of these things, of course. You might liken a college's endowment to a family's savings account. Obviously a family that has a capital resource in the form of a savings account can enjoy a fuller life than a family that must live only on the weekly pay check.

Q: What sense does it make to strive for increased endowment when the inflationary spiral shows no sign of slackening? Don't all the arguments against savings accounts apply to endowments for a college?

B: Endowments are better equipped than savings accounts to contend with inflationary problems because they can be directed into forms of investment that are not fixed, and hopefully will increase as the dollar loses its purchasing power.

Q: In other words a properly invested college endowment can form a hedge against inflation?

B: To some extent. There was a time when college and university endowments were almost exclusively in bonds—fixed obligations just as fixed as a savings account from the standpoint of capital value. But the pressures of an inflationary economy are such that trustee finance committees have had to invest more heavily in common stocks, equities. These provide a better hedge against inflation but oftentimes produce at least for a short period, a lower rate of return.

Q: . . . Which further complicates your immediate fiscal problem.

B: Which further complicates the fiscal problem but, from the standpoint of long-range expectations, is a much more sensible way of providing for the institution's ongoing future.

Q: And this strategy makes all the more essential Annual Giving support by alumni for current operations?

B: Right. And, of course, colleges that have been in business a long time, such as Middlebury, often reflect the impact of what has obviously been a traditional inflationary economy. There was a period in the mid-nineteenth century when the College's capital drive for endowment sought professorships, and the gift necessary to endow a professorship at that particular time, I think it was 1848, was $22,500. Well, back then $22,500 invested in bonds or mortgages—I suppose at 6 or 7%—would produce enough income to pay the salary of a competent, dedicated, senior teacher.

Q: Particularly when that salary was probably about $1,500.

B: You see, the professorships on our books right now—for example, the John G. Baldwin Professorship—I believe was established by a gift of $22,500, which was adequate for that period.

Q: And now it isn't nearly paying for itself?

B: No. Of course, it's still of use; the income it produces helps with faculty salaries, but its award to a senior member of the Faculty really is simply the honor of holding an endowed chair, because obviously the income it produces couldn't come close to paying a meaningful part of his salary.

Q: You'd think that a $22,500 investment in 1848 in government bonds, if they'd just been left there, today would be worth $200,000.

B: Oh, but it wouldn't. It would be paid off at maturity at $22,500 as a fixed obligation in dollars that buy less and meanwhile the interest would have been spent in support of the professorship. Now the $22,500 invested in land or equities could have kept abreast.

Q: Could the answer be to have a split endowment with half of the proceeds fed back into the principal and the other half supporting the professorship? But that would mean you'd have to double the size of your original gift.

B: That's an interesting concept. It wouldn't have to be that much, because your investment policy is far more aggressive, today, on the part of college and university trustees. Of course there's danger there, too: I learned last week that the market values of some Eastern college and university endowment portfolios are down appreciably this year due to recent drops in security values. With good management they will, of course, recover as the economy strengthens.

Q: What does it take, now, to endow a professorship?

B: Today the minimum amount necessary to endow a professorship is $500,000. (We estimate income in the 4 to 5% range.) If this professorship is to be in the area of the sciences, it probably should be close to $750,000. I might add that one of the most rewarding contributions that Middlebury or any gift-supported institution can receive is the endowment of a professorship because it does provide, in perpetuity, income that will pay the salary of a very competent senior teacher—relieving operating funds, that is income from tuition and from Annual Giving, that help meet the other needs of the institution—everything from paying the salaries of the younger faculty to maintaining the buildings.

Q: You mentioned, before, the endowment of scholarships. What size of gift is required to endow a student scholarship?

B: That's a good point: very frequently I'm asked, "Which is the most important endowment gift?" I've just spoken to the importance of the endowed professorship. But when asked, I tend to respond that the endowment gift can be most effective if it responds in terms of its approximate size. For example, if someone were considering assisting Middlebury by a bequest or a gift, if they're thinking in the $50-$75,000 area, then I would urge a scholarship; because that amount of new capital, properly invested, will provide a significant portion of the cost of having a promising, able student on the campus, who otherwise couldn't afford to come to Middlebury. Gifts that go upward from $100,000 I would tend to steer toward support of library acquisitions, art acquisitions, or faculty research.

Q: What is a typical amount required to establish a library acquisitions fund?

B: Well, there is no typical amount. Our accounting auditors quite properly have urged us not to establish separate endowment funds where the amount of principal is less than $1,000, since, they point out, the cost of administering such a fund dissipates most of the income produced by the fund annually. We have endowed funds in various fields that run from $1,000 upward. The range of the gift pretty much determines the purpose to which the donor directs his support. While an endowed professorship just isn't feasible unless there is a minimum of $500,000 provided, as little as $50,000 will endow at least a partial scholarship.

Q: And as little as, say, $5,000 would put x number of books on the shelf; the library estimates what, $10 a book?

B: Well, $5,000 at 5% would produce $250, which would provide roughly 25 books a year.

Q: We've been talking about sustaining support through Annual Giving and about endowment gifts. Which is more important?

B: That's a tough question—because both gifts are precious and essential. The contribution to Annual Giving may be compared to the gift we make to the weekly offering in our church. It supports current operations. I like to think that everyone can and should contribute to Annual Giving just as each of us gives to the support of his church. The endowment gift, on the other hand, comes far less frequently and, as a capital gift, quite naturally can't be made by everyone since it must be in a larger amount. Perhaps the best brief answer is that the Annual Giving contribution must come first since it sustains the College's present program; the endowment gift strengthens capital resources and provides additional opportunities for educational service.

Frosh P-rades of the Early 'Twenties

Freshman P-rades, with regalia supervised by the sophomores, were a colorful event in the annual autumn haze between 1909 and 1923. Usually held on a Saturday morning around November 1st, the march through the town and back to the campus took its name, presumably, from the pea-green beanies that all first-year men were required to wear. Other events in the Fall rivalry between the lower classes in those innocent days were the Flag Rush and/or the Cane Rush (which evolved into the Hat Scrap) and the Rope Pull, which was held across a very muddy pond in back of Porter Field. These snapshots and their identifications are from the album of the late Henry Eddy '23.

"The Hoboes": Reg Howard '26 and Brereton Mucklow '25, in the 1921 P-rade.

Alex Rennie, Jr. '23 as a provocative coed and, right, "Doc" Thomson '26 as a provocative nursemaid? artiste? Scout master?

Class of '26 P-rade turns in front of Congregational Church and marches jauntily south through the center of town, 1922.

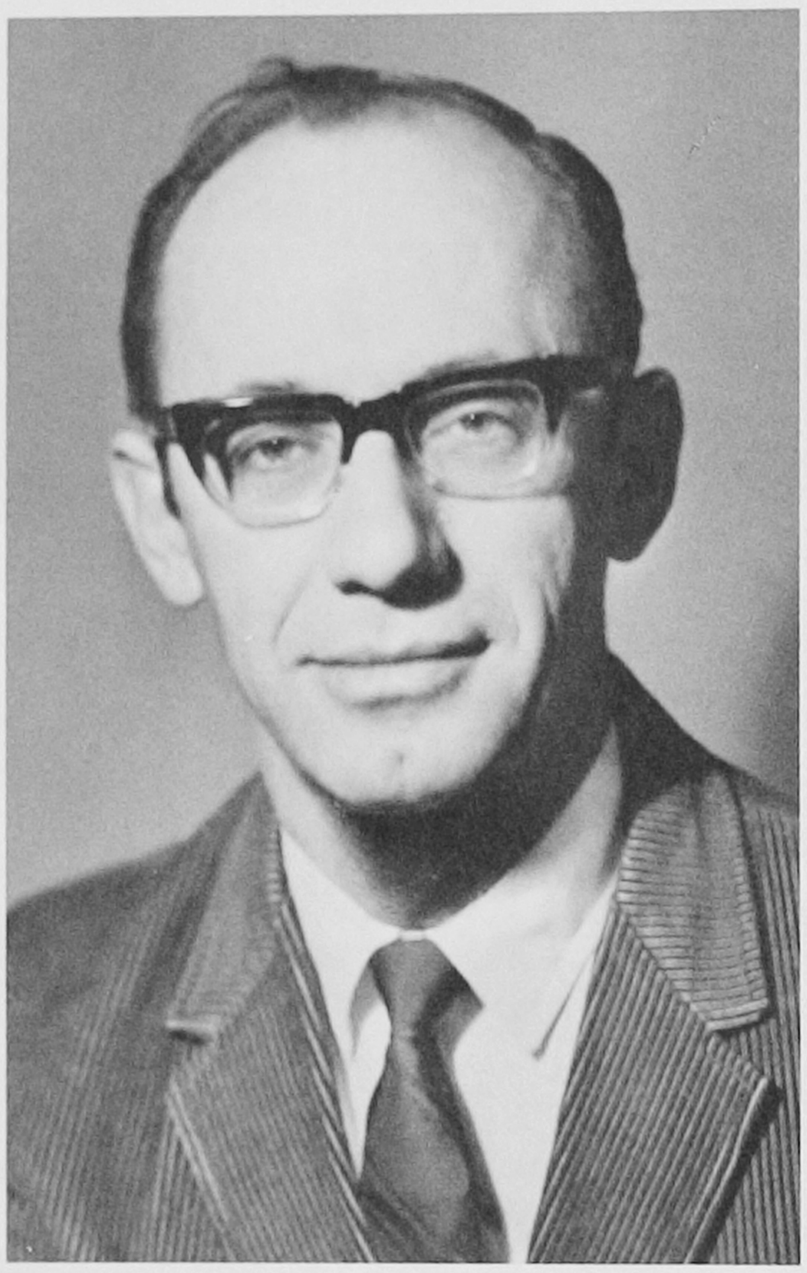
From the Modern Language Association and the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages

Andre Paquette is New Director of Graduate Language Schools



The new director of all graduate language schools at Middlebury is André Paquette, who was secretary for foreign languages of the MLA, executive secretary of the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages, and editor of its journal, Foreign Language Annals. He also has been coordinating the MLA Foreign Language Testing Program. Mr. Paquette has been a director for the past eight years of the Northeast Conference on the Teaching of Foreign Languages.

As successor to Dr. Stephen A. Freeman who retired September 1, Mr. Paquette will direct all graduate-level language training programs, including the seven Summer Language Schools on the campus, the Bread Loaf School of English and the Bread Loaf Writers' Conference in Ripton, and the four Middlebury College Graduate Schools abroad —in Mainz, Paris, Florence, and Madrid.

The graduate language schools in Europe have an enrollment of 230 and the eight summer schools and the Writers' Conference an enrollment of almost 1,400. Mr. Paquette is also lecturer with rank of professor in the division of Foreign Languages of Middlebury's undergraduate program.

Raised in Ashland, New Hampshire, Mr. Paquette is a graduate of Plymouth Teachers College of the University of New Hampshire and took his Master's in French at the University of Massachusetts. He is the author of nine published articles, co-author of two works on language testing, and author of Toward a Bilingual Nation, to be published next month.

After teaching French and Spanish in public schools of New Hampshire, Mr. Paquette was director of Foreign Language Education for that state's department of education in 1960-63. After a year of teaching French at SUNY—Plattsburgh, he directed the MLA's Modern Foreign Language Teacher Preparation study, 1964-65, and has since served continuously both the MLA and ACTFL (the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages).

André's family—wife Margaret Rose and children Jean-Pierre, Lisette-Michèle and Monique-Anne—are now settled in their new home northeast of Middlebury town.

Confrontation in Indianapolis

Gentlemen:

I read carefully the article that was in the Middlebury News Letter concerning Holly Porter's work and find it an accurate description of the process in which she has given leadership.

It is unfortunate that Mr. Kimbell, who is the Director of Public Safety for the City of Indianapolis, still did not understand the laboratory confrontation method of dealing with the tensions that exist between the police and the minority communities. The very fact that Mr. Kimbell believed that the community representatives who took part in the laboratory confrontation were not "representative" only furnishes a further clarification about the cause of the failure of the laboratory confrontation in Indianapolis.

As a matter of fact, having worked across the country and having been involved in various kinds of confrontations, including several in cities where there has been a large degree of successful utilization of the laboratory confrontation process, I would say that Mr. Kimbell exercised poor judgment in taking the action he did in withdrawing the police from the confrontation.

One factor that Mr. Kimbell did not mention in his letter was that the police were withdrawn from the laboratory confrontation after one of the community representatives asked that the police not wear their firearms during the discussions. It was strange to see the police dressed casually in slacks and sport shirts, but wearing their service revolvers. These were provocative symbols to the minority community representatives, and in order to enhance the discussions, a courteous request was made to the police that the firearms not be worn into the room where the discussions were taking place. This the police were not willing to do.

Mr. Kimbell makes no reference to this factor, which was the factor in the termination of the confrontation.

Mr. Kimbell makes reference to the fact that there are "many roads to Jerusalem" and that the Indianapolis Police Department is vigorously exploring some alternatives. Our contacts in Indianapolis have not revealed any confidence in the kind of programs they have and which Mr. Kimbell refers to in his letter. Most of those to which he gave reference are the standard "public relations" kind of programs in police-community relations which have not proven to be effective.

Mr. Kimbell is right in saying that there is some trend away from what he calls "sensitivity training." The laboratory confrontation method is not sensitivity training, in spite of his use of those words to describe it. However, it is true that police departments generally have resisted the kind of "eyeball to eyeball" exposure to community problems, and that there is a trend away from the use of this resource. However, as events in Augusta, Georgia, and Jackson, Mississippi have again made clear, we are in the midst of a serious crisis, and the police will play a vital role in it. The question is whether they can be re-equipped and re-trained rapidly enough to work in this socially sensitive period in which the future of our country is fully at stake.

Summer News Letter

Gentlemen:

The summer News Letter was a fine reflection of a fair-minded board that reported so well the kind of treatment given the campus unrest at Middlebury and the "five days in May." Such a wise president and faculty to be able to keep the student activities during those difficult days to a serious low key.

My congratulations!

LEILA B. HEIMBACH, MA '40
Coldwater, Michigan

Gentlemen:

Recent issues of the News Letter have been first-rate but you have hit a peak with the Summer issue.

Both in content and format this is an excellent magazine. Your report on student and faculty reaction during the five days in May was of particular interest because, here in Akron, we have been so close to the Kent State tragedy. It adds perspective to know how the Middlebury people reacted.

President Armstrong shows himself a worthy successor to Presidents Thomas, Moody and Stratton with his broad gauge views of today's problems.

It makes one proud to be a Middlebury alumnus when one reads the interviews with such enlightened and articulate professors as Drs. Freeman and Wissler.

Incidentally, I was astounded to learn that Dr. Freeman was only 27 when he arrived at Middlebury in 1925. That first year in the Chateau, I was one of the few male students allowed to eat there. The food and the companionship were the best on the campus.

You have mighty good material to write about but it takes more than that to put out a good magazine. The writing and editing are excellent.

Congratulations.

JAMES S. JACKSON '26
Akron, Ohio

Gentlemen:

The News Letter has done its readers a disservice with the article entitled "Five Days in May." The article is extremely misleading, for it is both incomplete and inaccurate.

To begin with, the editor's chosen "Sampler of Remarks to College Assemblies in Mead Chapel" is about as representative of the remarks in Mead as speeches of Barry Goldwater and Winston Prouty are representative of those given on the floor of the U.S. Senate. Significantly, no member of the original strike committee is quoted in the "Sampler" or, for that matter, anywhere else in the article. Thus, the "Sampler" is not that at all; it presents an unbalanced picture of the Mead discussions and meetings. Perhaps it represents a mood wished for by the editor.

What the editor wished were the case can be more clearly seen in his personal "Reflections on Middlebury's Extraordinary Week." He states:

> "They [the Faculty] also insisted, in voting a political statement on Saturday afternoon, that the vote was an expression of faculty members as concerned individuals, not of the Middlebury Faculty as an official College body."

Exactly the opposite is true. The Faculty did in fact vote as a body, with the stipulation that the numerical vote be recorded publicly for the benefit of those dissenting. (The editor's earlier statement that the Faculty refused to endorse the national movement is correctly contradicted by the editor himself in the "Chronology of Events.) Precedent (if it was really necessary) for the Faculty's action had been clearly and directly established in its resolution of Oct. 7, 1969 opposing the war in Vietnam, which stated in part:

> "The Faculty of Middlebury College believes that there are times when it is appropriate for the Faculty as a body to express opinions on off-campus issues which affect the vital interests of the College community and higher education."

Thus, the Faculty did act, with proper precedent, as a body, no matter what the editor might wish to believe.

But the section of the article which should be least objectionable unfortunately combines the worst features already mentioned—inaccuracy and incompleteness—with perhaps a more damaging fault. For the so-called "Chronology of Events" is marred additionally by the not-so-subtle manifestations of the political biases of the "reporter."

I do not suggest that the "reporter" should have included in his chronology everything that happened that week; clearly that would have been impossible. But not even to mention such things as the abortive State House memorial service, the Vermont Caucus meeting here at Middlebury, and the cancellation of several athletic events in favor of supporting the strike seems strange at the least.

Further, the report of events ends with the statement that only "specific political (my emphasis) projects" continued after the resumption of classes. That statement is simply not true. Of the efforts that continued following the official termination of the strike, only those concentrations on 1970 Vermont election campaigns and organizations specifically working for an immediate end to the war continued to function as purely political organizations. Several deliberately non-political efforts did continue, including the draft-counseling service and the follow-up attempts to establish a working, human relationship with the townspeople. The latter effort, incidentally, has continued through the summer with remarkable success, in the form of the Community Involvement Group (formerly the Strike Committee).

But my primary objection to the "Chronology" remains that the "reporter" has no business including his own politically-oriented observations concerning the quality of the speeches and speakers at the several gatherings in Mead Chapel during the strike week, at least not in a supposedly factual accounting of the week's events.

For instance, the "reporter" informs us that Lt. Gov. Hayes' address on Wednesday of strike week was a "pedestrian effort." That is, if possible, a factually inaccurate opinion. In his speech, Hayes announced that he, as acting Governor of Vermont (Gov. Davis was out-of-state at the time), would hold a memorial service for the dead Kent State students and the Vietnam war dead on the steps of the State House in Montpelier that Saturday. In the several days following that announcement, Hayes received an unprecedented amount of right-wing backlash, including a number of threats both on his life and on the safety of his family and those who might participate in the memorial service. To prevent further acts of violence in an already tense atmosphere, Hayes cancelled the service (none of the preceding information is mentioned in the News Letter). Without debating the wisdom of the almost-service or the Hayes announcement of it here at Middlebury, I only wish to suggest that the speech could hardly be termed "pedestrian." Ill-advised, perhaps, but certainly not pedestrian.

Similarly, the "reporter" advised us that former Gov. Hoff's address was a "rather shallow political speech, disappointing, though better than Hayes." Really? By whose standards (the Chronology is unsigned, by the way)? Again, the "reporter" neglects his duty to report simply the facts, not his personal viewpoint, especially in a proclaimed Chronology.

Of course I do not object to the right of the "reporter" to have political leanings; rather I object to his forcing of those leanings upon that large number of alumni, parents and friends who will take for granted the accuracy of the article, especially the "Chronology." This is true particularly for the alumni, for many of whom the News Letter is the sole remaining tie with the college.

In general, the article "Five Days in May" serves to misrepresent the strike week at Middlebury, when in a time of crisis the College as a community showed that it can indeed face up to a serious situation with some necessary actions. I, for one, resent such a misleading and inaccurate portrayal of what really happened.

DAN GILLMOR '73

The sampler was not presented as "representative" and the editor felt no obligation to make it so: when space is limited, readers are entitled to the best and in selecting among these better statements, a prime criterion must be the density of ideas per paragraph. Second, at their extraordinary Saturday meeting in May the Faculty showed a keen sensibility to the dangers implicit in seeming to present to the public a single monolithic formulation of political doctrine bearing the Middlebury College stamp. These dangers were cogently argued by a senior member and his motion was endorsed by a majority vote of the Faculty assembled. Of course, the Faculty voted "as a body" in the trivial sense of a group of men and women assembled; the discussion preceding the question made it abundantly clear to this observer that they were intent on avoiding any promulgation of an official College position—to which a minority of their group could not in conscience subscribe. (Dan is also incorrect in stating that the Faculty endorsed the national strike: they explicitly refused to do so, as had the College Council and the Faculty Council before them.) Third, alumni and parents are assumed to be concerned in particular with what happened on the Middlebury campus and even of that, space permitted mention of only the principal events. What happened in Montpelier and elsewhere was duly reported elsewhere and could be read elsewhere. Fourth, the statement that "only specific political projects continued after resumption of classes" is obviously untrue—and not to be found in the News Letter. "Only" is the word that falsifies the statement and "only" is Dan's addition to what we wrote. Fifth, both the caption "—from the Reporter's Notebook" and the terse style of the chronology were cues that this was how the reporter saw it as the events were happening. The reporter's identity is clearly inferable from the masthead and there was no attempt to disguise the personal character of his assessments of speeches or other events. Like all reporters this one reported the facts as they appeared to him, either first-hand or by reconstruction from reliable information received. To suppose that "The Facts" are somehow reported, elsewhere, by another and presumably "purer" method is, in this editor's opinion, naive. We are confident that our readers are sophisticated enough to understand our report for what it was intended to be—a short-hand or vignetted record of the main events and of the order in which they occurred.
